Come, O lovers of the mar - tyrs, let us reverently venerate the glorious Jul - ian, the sufferer for Christ and fel - low cit - i - zen of Paul, who appeared as a traveler and finished the same course. For, thrown into the water with [ sea monsters and . . . ] sea monsters and poi - son-ous snakes, he sanctified the earth by his blood, and the sea by his pas - sage. Having departed from things here to the eternal dwell - ing, he received the prize of his struggles from the right hand of the Al - might - y, // and asks for our souls purification and great mer - cy.
