Sitka cathedral on most endangered property list

SITKA, AK – Historic Saint Michael the Archangel Cathedral here is one of two churches in the Diocese of Alaska that appears on the Alaska Association for Historic Preservation’s [AAHP] “Ten Most Endangered Historic Properties” list for 2016. Also on this year’s list is the Ascension of Our Lord Church, Karluk, AK, which was constructed in 1888.

Designed by Saint Innocent Veniaminov, Saint Michael Cathedral was built between 1844 and 1848. The present structure is a reconstruction of the original building which burned to the ground in 1966.

“The cathedral is once again being threatened by issues related to ongoing water damage,” said His Grace, Bishop David of Sitka and Alaska. “Efforts are underway by several Alaskan organizations to put together engineering studies to obtain a solid overall picture of what is wrong and what is needed to repair the structure.”

The AAHP helps provide funding for hands-on preservation work on endangered properties. The two churches and other eight properties on the 2016 list will be eligible to apply to AAHP for matching grants for ongoing preservation efforts. ■
